Women on Waves' Carry out Dangerous Drone Operation in Polish Territory

The national pro-life charity LIFE is calling for the German and Polish governments to act swiftly to prevent the pro-abortion group 'Women on Waves' from transporting illegal abortion drugs into Polish territory using drones.

LIFE Spokesman Peter Sullivan says: "This latest act by the group illustrates their complete disregard for the laws of a sovereign country. They spuriously claim that using drones to transport illegal drugs from one country into another is not breaking the law because "regulations have never been made for such an action". While Poland may have no specific regulations in place to stop any illegal drug being transported across the border using drones, that does not mean that those who transport drugs such as heroin, for example, by the novel means of drones are above the law.

'Women on Waves' are openly flouting Poland's laws and threatening the lives of unborn children. No matter what the opinion of an individual or group may be about abortion, openly flouting the laws of a country and threatening the lives of unborn children, in defiance of the will of its people, cannot be justified. Urgent steps need to be taken to stop this organisation from continuing with its extreme actions."
